

Viticulture briefs

Jackson Family Wines has opened Gran Moraine Winery, its first winery in Oregon's Willamette Valley.

The Santa Rosa wine company appointed Oregon vintner Eugenia Keegan to serve as general manager and winemaker at Gran Moraine. Ken Kupperman was named director of vineyards.

"Their expertise in the field and passion for the Willamette Valley is unmatched, and no one could ask for a more respected and admired winemaking and farming team," Hugh Reimers, chief operating officer for Jackson Family Wines, said in a statement.

The Jackson family purchased the 220-acre hillside vineyard and former Soléna Estate Winery in the Yamhill-Carlton district in May 2013. Gran Moraine's first wine is a pinot noir with a suggested retail price of $45.

The family's portfolio includes more than 30 wineries in California, Oregon, France, Italy, Chile and Australia. Founded in 1982 by the late Jess Jackson, Jackson Family Wines is now led by his wife, Barbara Banke, who serves as chairman and proprietor.
